This invention relates generally to a solid state transmission system for transmitting information through an interface from a first transmitter/receiver (Rx/Tx) to a second Rx/Tx through a medium. Information is transmitted from a first transmitter/receiver (Rx/Tx) to a second Rx/Tx through a medium in a solid state transmission system. The information is transmitted through the medium at a given bit rate. Typically, the medium, which may be a fiber optic cable, is moved at a relatively slow speed from point to point. Hence, it is highly desirable that the transmission system have a high throughput rate, i.e., transmit at a rate of several million bits per second. FIG. 1 is a block diagram showing a conventional method for transmitting information from a transmitting apparatus 10 to a receiving apparatus 20. In FIG. 1, the transmitting apparatus 10 comprises a modulation/demodulation unit 11, a transmission unit 12, a transmission fiber 13, a receiver circuit 14, a synchronization circuit 15, a bus 16, and a receive unit 17
