In Japan, the series was developed and published by Square, a subsidiary of Square Enix, and was published by Enix in North America. The series is set in a fictional region called Eorzea, a plane of existence where the player controls a powerful avatar known as a "guardian", which serves to protect the traveler and deliver him/her to an adventure in Eorzea. The series was first introduced in Final Fantasy VII, which was released on the PlayStation in November 1997. Ever since then, all future entries in the series have been developed by Square Enix for the PlayStation, PlayStation 2, PlayStation

Tue, 04 May 2015 01:46:41 +0000Author: - Sponsored Feature - Turn-Based Fantasy RPG The main feature of Eldenback is that you play your game as a city, in turn-based mode, on a geographical map. You can initiate turn-based actions (going to a location, attacking, gathering or mining, moving, etc.) during the randomization of your turns. You can set your Empire's goal at the beginning of the game, and then play the game with your own goal in mind, getting powerful and trading. Finally, when you are ready to finish the game, you can start with your own goal as your new Empire's goal.

Also, see our list of top apps for iOS here: Mike Rogers (R-Mich.), the ranking Republican on the House Intelligence Committee, is calling for an FBI investigation into evidence that the White House had advance knowledge of the Benghazi attacks and why the administration waited until a month later to disclose the details to the public. The allegations are similar to those behind the Iran sanctions legislation pushed by the White House and Senate Democrats. ADVERTISEMENT "I think we need to send every email, every call and every text back to Washington to see if these allegations are accurate," Rogers told the Washington Examiner. "If the allegations are true, it's just beyond the pale," he added. Rogers said the White House knew it was having to answer questions about the terrorist attack on its watch, and that it never provided one good answer. Some of those answers came out in the weeks and months after the attack. The White House has denied it kept information secret until the election, when President Obama faced reelection, but some administration officials say privately it would have been premature to release such sensitive information.

“The White House was sending out (intelligence) information to the public because it wanted to send an election-year message about what a great job they were doing,” Rogers told the Examiner. He said he would support an investigation into the allegation that the administration withheld information that could have prevented the attack, although he was unsure whether it should be opened with an administration representative under oath. “We have to find out if these things are true or not,
