The technology adds a new dimension to the realism of player movement, making it feel more familiar and relevant to modern footballers. As with previous FIFA titles, gameplay will respond to player actions in order to keep the action engaging and fresh, while also creating a more fluid experience for everyone. Players can activate tactical options, visual effects or receive coaching instructions based on how they play, an experience that has been re-imagined for a new generation. The new Control Intelligence features introduced in FIFA 11 help players better master the defensive and offensive positions, allowing gamers to create, build and execute their own individual style of play, with new tactical options designed to respond in real-time to how a player plays. In FIFA 22, players can now control their dribbling by pushing or pulling the analog stick in a particular direction to alter a combination of direction and speed of the pass. Along with this, users can choose between two options when breaking through the defense, with different attack and sprint momentum varying depending on the choice made. FIFA 22 is the first FIFA title to feature Real Player Motion Technology (RPM), that will be available through EA's Origin service. RPM will be a premium update to existing players, with the option to purchase the feature being available for a one-off fee and any subsequent updates to the game.
