To explore the criteria of MR imaging of colorectal liver metastases and evaluate its correlation with the local and distant recurrences. The status of 29 liver metastases of colorectal cancer and 43 primary liver cancers in 43 patients were measured by Gd-DOTA enhanced MRI and surgical pathology or metastasectomy. There were 46 residual liver metastases (89%) and 55 local recurrences (120.5%). The main criteria for measuring liver metastases was based on Gd-DOTA enhanced MRI. The signal intensity of the liver metastases with tumor capsule was more higher than those without tumor capsule. The stronger Gd-DOTA enhancement of liver metastases with longer duration, larger maximum dimension, larger volume, which were greater than those without. There were significant correlations between the MRI findings of liver metastases and the surgical pathology findings. There were 7 cases of distant hepatic recurrences (15.2%) and 11 cases of recurrence in lymph nodes (23.2%). The tumor size, the volume and the enhancement with Gd-DOTA can be used to identify liver metastases or distant metastases of colorectal cancer. At present, the MRI and surgical pathology are the best two methods to confirm the liver metastases or recurrence in lymph nodes, but the MRI is the ideal method for detecting distant hepatic metastases of colorectal cancer.
