Someone other than Steve Jobs could have designed this one The man with the golden memory In 2010, I released a game that was aimed at a certain demographic - the "50,000 hours crowd". It was a rare mobile game called "The Only Snowman". It was a game where the player needed to watch a short video each time and input the correct answer to a question. The answer would change each time. Now, I don't know if that is what originally sold the game, but that is what people seem to remember when the game came up in conversation. It was a concept that I thought was quite unique. In one of my weekly video diaries, I brought up the idea of creating a "video encyclopedia" with an endless number of videos to watch. In the end, I realized that they were just concept pieces. After about a year of sitting on the idea, it had finally sunk in that the "video encyclopedia" would have to be designed for a large team of people to work on it together. When you start a new game, you have a list of objectives and also a list of characters that need to be explained. There are scenes and steps to go through, and then there are things that the player needs to discover and get to. Once this is done, you have to get to the end. After working on this for a few months, I realized that by putting myself in the game and letting the game mold me, I could release a game that was much more exciting. One thing I had never done before, was to put down my own voice and likeness in a game. This was supposed to be just a small short film, but the more I experimented with it, the more I found that the game was starting to turn into something much bigger. I hope you will enjoy it. Have fun! Steve Jobs Published by: Mobigame Inc. Developer: Steve Jobs All About Steve Jobs: I was born in San Francisco on February 24, 1955. I spent my earliest years in Cupertino, California, the Santa Clara County community that later would become part of the Apple corporation. I didn't know it when I was growing up, but I was born in a small, unincorporated area of Santa Clara called Los Gatos that was never

Image size 1280x928px 181.81 KB Show More Published : Apr 12, 2018In just one week, Los Angeles' bus transfer lanes will be going through a half-century to mark exactly half a century since the LA County Metropolitan Transportation Authority began tests of the so-called "transit lanes." While the technology works—officials have logged more than 1.8 million trips on the lane in past year—the lane itself is already showing some wear. "The material is surprisingly tolerant to vandalism," Steve Moore, deputy director of the UCLA Institute for Transportation Studies, told Curbed. "It's been like that for the last 5,000 miles." The lane's roadway will turn 50 this week. Experts say the transit lanes are quite sustainable because of the relatively low speeds allowed—you can't legally exceed 40 mph—and also because they remain out of public view. "On [highways with bus lanes], you'd tend to see higher speeds and more congestion," Moore told Curbed. "The lane environment [on Metro's lanes] is quite the opposite."package ext import ( "github.com/docker/libnetwork/datastore" "github.com/docker/libnetwork/types"
