contain a wave of crude oil inundating our beaches, our towns and our rivers. Luckily, the Gulf waters were not as torrid as had been predicted and the oil have, like corncocks, withered and died. But we must not relax in our efforts to ensure that such a thing never happens again. So long as those petrochemical-powered cars and trucks continue to use fuel derived from oil, the lives of future generations will be threatened, along with the health of the environment. The world stands to lose as many as 100 million barrels of oil per day by 2010. In the past, we've always had to accept a few discomforts, inconveniences or damage in the general interest of the good of all. When World War I broke out, for example, some of us had to put up with a stiffer tax on sugar and tobacco. The tax was intended to combat the malnutrition and ill health resulting from the shortage of food caused by the war. Today, we might consider, along with millions of others, putting up with traffic congestion or even a brief inconvenience at a traffic signal in order to prevent what has already proved a near-disaster. Again, in the war years, of course, a tax of some sort was needed because our society had not yet fully taken on the means of modern transportation. If the world is to be brought back to sanity, it will require a revolution in transportation. And this is not the time to be so optimistic that we think all is going to be well, as we look toward the future. Two decades ago, in d41b202975

Q: Compare two collections or return new collection in LINQ I am looking for the LINQ answer to the following. I have 2 collections. `var bad = new List(); bad.Add("1"); bad.Add("2"); bad.Add("3"); var good = new List(); good.Add("4"); good.Add("5"); good.Add("6");` I am looking for a solution to only include the good items into a new collection (not just an in-place replace). For example, the previous would yield this: `var filtered = new List(); filtered.AddRange(good); filtered.Add("1"); filtered.Add("2"); filtered.Add("3");` The actual problem I am having is that after loading the bad items in the database, it is possible that some users could make changes and add to the bad collection. My current solution is to just re-query the bad collection, and then
