You will also learn how to increase or decrease the size and opacity of images. Working with Layers Photoshop is a composite editing tool. Many of its functions, including most of its tools and functions, can be performed on individual layers. As a digital artist, you will most likely use many Photoshop tools, some of which will work only on layers and some that will work on both layers and the final image. 1. Open a new image and follow along with the following exercise. Figure 2-1 shows a blank canvas, with different layers stacked on top of each other. Notice how in Figure 2-1, the opacity of the layers is adjusted, and the layers are layered in order (light blue over black) to create the colored shading effect. This is the first example of how to build a composited or layered image. Figure 2-1: This layered image was created using Photoshop layers. Understanding the Layer Dialog Box When you first open a new image, Photoshop creates a new document named Untitled1. To go back to the original settings, select Image > Adjustments > Adjustment Layers (Windows) or Layer > Adjustment Layers (Mac) from the menu bar or dock. The Layer dialog box opens, as shown in Figure 2-2. Figure 2-2: The Layer dialog box. The first section of the dialog box is the Layer Selection area. This area contains the list of the image's layers. You can create a layer by simply clicking it with the mouse. Because this is a monochrome image, it only has one layer. The second section of the dialog box is the Layers panel, as shown in Figure 2-2. The Layers panel allows you to adjust the opacity, size, and type of the different layers of the image. Click the New Layer button, as shown in Figure 2-2, to create a new layer. To adjust the opacity of the existing layers, right-click on a

The top electoral official in the country said Friday that the economy and terrorism were the biggest concerns for voters as they head to the polls Sunday for a constitutional referendum on establishing a legal framework for same-sex marriage, polygamy and abortion. "For me, the first priority is to keep the economy going. We really need to boost economic growth, in order to bring jobs and increase investment," said Philippe Bucquoy, Quebec's chief electoral officer and chairman of the first meeting of the electoral council. The national assembly, Quebec's provincial legislature, must also organize a special meeting to discuss all aspects of the referendum before it is finalized by the returning officer, who will mark the ballot boxes, Bucquoy said. "The second priority is to fight the enemy. The enemy is terrorism and right-wing extremism. We also have to be vigilant in Quebec," said Bucquoy. On Wednesday, Liberal Premier Philippe Couillard said that the economy is the number one issue for voters. "How do you go to bed and sleep well? How do you think that your children or your grandchildren will live and work in a country where it's okay to have a child with one partner and where it's not a reason to have an abortion? These are the questions that people have," he said at a news conference in Montreal. The referendum, officially titled "Love is Love", is to be held alongside a provincial election and the federal vote on Oct. 21. Conservative Leader Andrew Scheer said Thursday that he has heard that many employers are concerned about the impact of the government's budget, which announced tax increases on income over $150,000. "I am very concerned about the $1.6-billion tax hike that the government is going to have to impose on middle class Canadians starting next January," Scheer told reporters in Quebec City. The prime minister came out in support of a boycott of the vote by some of Quebec's Sikh population after the Parti Québécois made a campaign promise to hold a binding referendum on patriation. On Tuesday, Quebec's justice minister, Jody Wilson-Raybould, said that she had reviewed her position on the matter after "a number of conversations." "What I will say as an individual, I know I am not in any political position to support either side of this issue," she said. Electoral officials will only be present at the polls to ensure the law is
